Through the Years

CINCINNATI
EXPERIENCE

We've been building and brewing our own way since we started. And we're not done. A region fueled by dreamers, doers, innovators and makers, Cincinnati glitters with a view and vibe unmistakably its own. Here, east meets west, north meets south, old meets new and reinvention reigns. We're raw, real, and full of heart, buttoned-up and tatted-up, rich in tradition and alive in the times. A vibrant mix of cultures and contrasts, we come together across bridges, regions and backgrounds to create a community we're proud to call home.

FAMOUS PEOPLE FROM THE CINCY AREA

- ◆ Three presidents (Taft, Grant, Harrison) were from the Cincy area. (Psst: This is why the logo for Taft's Ale House is a silhouette of Taft relaxing in his bathtub!)
- ◆ Award-winning actor George Clooney is also from Cincy: he also attended both NKU and the University of Cincinnati, making him a true hometown celebrity.
- ◆ Mary Wineberg, an Olympic Gold Medalist in track and field, attended Walnut Hills High School as well as the University of Cincinnati. She was recently elected to the Board of Education for Cincinnati Public Schools.
- ◆ Nick and Drew Lachey – brothers, members of the band 98 Degrees, business partners, celebrity guest stars, and hosts in a range of popular TV shows – were born and raised in Cincinnati.
- ◆ Sarah Jessica Parker got her start right here in Cincy, and continues to praise the city's art and culture scene to this day: The Sex and the City star once told the Enquirer that "Cincinnati, and I really mean this, is a great city."
- ◆ Comedian Dave Chappelle grew up (and still lives) in Yellow Springs, a small town just outside of Dayton, Ohio, in the Cincinnati area.
- ◆ Bill Hemmer, a popular journalist, started off as a sports reporter – traveling with the Bengals from 1988 to 1992 (including the team's trip to the Super Bowl in 1989).
